campaign, are we going to trust you with a penny, when you have shown nothing but disinclination to comply with your obligation? For all you know, this is the situation. We are not going to tell you our business, and we are not going to argue with you about literary questions. We are simply concerned to see that the money which has been paid to you in good faith is balanced by the delivery of the manuscripts as per the contract.

If you will read this letter over 16,000 times you will save the trouble of having it retyped 15,999 times.

I am sending your letter and a copy of this to Yorke. I am perfectly sure that he will agree with everything I say.

My final advice to you is to send the manuscripts, such as they are, to Yorke, and leave it to his good feeling to make further arrangements, if such appear desirable after due consideration. But until you do that, you can expect nothing but direful judgments.

I am very sorry, personally, that this sort of trouble should be constantly arising. I am willing to believe that it is your colonial ignorance of how business is transacted, and if I am called upon to give evidence against you, that will be the line that I will take.

But it will be very annoying from every point of view if Yorke suddenly decided to get after you.

Yours ever,

 Dismissed, Re. Handshake Case*

Our friend^s arrived on Sunday morning and we have been very busy ever since seeing London in all its aspects.

I am enclosing a duplicate of the proposed preliminary contract. Germer was very favorably impressed, especially by Goldston. But with my morbid pessimism I took the thing down to Steadman, Van Praagh, & Gaylor of 4 Old Burlington Street. (These were the lawyers that fought the case against Mathers on Equinox 1, 3 and won.) I could only see the managing clerk Mr. Lloyd, but he impressed me as exceptionally shrewd, and he pointed out in general that the contract on the surface tied me up completely for a long period, while not binding them at all to any specific performance. But (as the Qabalah would say) this is a contract which is not a contract, because it refers to imaginary animals such as supplementary contracts which may never exist; so that there is really no compensation, and it seems doubtful whether the whole thing might not be null and void.

There is also the objection that paintings should not be included in publishing contracts.

There are several minor details which can no doubt be easily be remedied.

There is also the important consideration which made me send you my hysterical telegram of this afternoon. In any case, I must say that it seems to me that a contract of such far-reaching effects should be settled by a conference between their solicitors and ours.

I further think that we should show no undue anxiety in grabbing the bait. The enclosed slip appears to me one of Mr. Stekensen's best imaginative efforts.

Germer wants to get off to Leipzig as quickly as he can, and naturally I do not want to keep him hanging about. It is a great misfortune that you are away. But it might help if you would send us a fairly full telegram, saying what you think of this letter.

If this reaches you before the $600
arrives, no need to wire any money,
unless of something new turns up.
Perhaps may wire you to day.

Will write again from Santiago.

3rd July.

C. F. 93. Hoffer has turned in the most marvellous drawing for 777. Will make a big thing of it.

Going in to Dresden to-day, thence to Tschymoff (address later) for this job and

I'll have to pay hotel by cheque and am doubtful of exact amount of balance. If you can pay in $20 pending the arrival of the $600,

I shall be able to sleep.

Ripe people here are really A. 1., all genuine enthusiasts without being silly.
