Dear Yorke,

Over this past week - end I waded thru some papers & to find A.C.'s old letters for you. Most of them have already been destroyed - wisely enough - the remaining ones I consign to you.
They are yours.

It was most interesting, reading his letters. I still cannot conceive that they contain anything of value. They merely evidence his concern with the prosaic values of his own welfare. Not that I blame him. There was the naivete which endowed him with the idealism of our own youthful hearts, projected on the screen of his own gross egotism. I'm sure much
