Yes, I want the bandies - I've a hell of a cold.

I'm sorry you can't find the Watson Turner letters;
they must be somewhere.

Explain to Hurchant that the firm is under contract with me.

Did Maie seduce Gorke? He writes as if he were loving her. I wish to god see her & say I'm very friendly & will do all I can to help her. But if she won't answer my letters I can only suppose she wants trouble. It would be better for her to confess her adultery with Gorke. I should prefer to be plaintiff in the divorce.

The curious disappearance of Mr. Aleister Crowley - the celebrated Poet, Explorer and Magician, known to some as the Master Therion - opens a wide field of speculation as to what really has occurred. As one who really knew the Magus, several hypotheses came to mind following the receipt of a message from Lisbon that he had mysteriously disappeared. Suicide! Murder! Ogun! And last, that it was merely another of the ridiculous "stunts" which have in the past earned him such an unspeakably vile reputation that it has been written of him that he is "A Man we'd like to Hang".

Yet certain developments within the last few days arouse innumerable doubts as to whether this is simply another attempt on his part to pull the leg of a gullible public, or whether he really has played his last stunt and has departed to rejoin the Devil whose terrestrial emissary it is alleged, he most seriously acclaimed himself since he openly acknowledged the self-chosen title of "THE BEAST 666" - the lover of "The Scarlet Woman" of whom we read in the Apocalypse.

The curious disappearance of Mr. Webster Gowley - the celebrated poet, dramatist and novelist, known to us as the author of "The Road to Nowhere" - opens a wide field of enquiry inasmuch as he has really disappeared. As one who really knew the man, several hypotheses came to mind following the receipt of a message from London that he had mysteriously disappeared. "Webster Gowley" is a name which has been newly known as "the ridiculous" which have in the past years, but such an unexplained disappearance it has been written of him that he is "A man who is dead".

Yet certain developments will be of interest to those who are interested in the man. It is difficult to doubt as to whether this is simply another attempt on his part to gain the aid of a relative friend, or whether he really has played his last trump and has departed to join the hosts of departed spirits.
It is alleged, he was seriously confined through illness openly acknowledged the self-known state of "The Road to Nowhere" the issue of "The Road to Nowhere" or else we read in the Apocalypse.

In the U.S.A. reported James a fortnight ago.
It alleged that Webster, while in London, addressed a lecture to his family, an occasion, leaving the lecture with certain personal references to his work.

The curious disappearance of Mr. Aleister Crowley - the celebrated poet, explorer and magician, known as the Master Thibon - opens a wide field of speculation as to what really has occurred. As one who really knew the Magus, several hypotheses came to mind following the receipt of a message from Lisbon that he had mysteriously disappeared. - Suicidal murder! Gyps! And last, that it was merely another of the "ridiculous stunts" which have in the past earned him such an unspeakably vile reputation that it has been written of him that he is "A man you'd like to hang".

Yet certain developments within the last few days arouse innumerable doubts as to whether this is simply another attempt on his part to pull the leg of a gullible public, or whether he really has played his last stunt and has departed to rejoin the Devil whose infernal company it is alleged, he most seriously considered himself since he openly acknowledged the self-chosen title of "The Great Beast" - the lover of "The Scarlet Woman" of whom we read in the Apocalypse.

In the P.B.P. reported issued a fortnight ago, it is alleged that Crowley, while in Portugal, addressed a letter to Miss Sarah Jaeger, an acquaintance, leaving the letter with certain persons - belongings of the vessel called "Boca do Inferno" (The Mouth of the Inferno) not far from Lisbon -- and from that day to this he has not been heard from. Miss Jaeger, who is a young German woman of mean attainments, has returned to Berlin distressed and in anguish, believing him to have committed suicide.

with grief, and being a believer in Spiritualism, she has requested me to obtain a message from the medium who contacted Conan Doyle's departed shade - in the hope of obtaining some last word of consolation, and perhaps a clue as to what occurred on those fatal rocks of the "Boca Inferni".

Furthermore, I have also heard from a friend in Berlin, that there is there extant a rumour that a luxurious studio maintained as a Berlin headquarters by Aleister Crowley has been raided by the German Police and there was discovered, what had long been suspected by many - Soviet Propaganda! Soviet plans of world revolution and domination! Is this, finally, the secret of his fabulous wealth? May this not explain his disappearance, his suicide? The Oghm?

I came to know and revere this remarkable man of genius because of prolonged personal contact, and having come under the influence of his intriguing sophistry and his delightful manner ( I actually enrolled as a student in his so-called Black Magical Rites, employing the mystical signature of "The Serpent 366") - although his present end, if suicide it be, is hardly compatible with the philosophy he always preached (but then he always was a joker). I sought assistance with a local medium, Mr. Alfred V. Peters, who was recommended to me by the Marylebone Spiritualist Association, in order to fulfill Miss Jaeger's request.

I came to know and revere this remarkable man of genius because of prolonged personal contact, and having come under the influence of his intriguing sophistry and his delightful manner ( I actually enrolled as a student in his so-called Black Magical Rites, employing the mystical signature of "The Serpent 358") - although his present end, if suicide it be, is hardly compatible with the philosophy he always preached (but then he always was a joker). I sought audience with a local medium, Mr. Alfred V. Peters, who was recommended to me by the Marylebone Spiritualist Association, in order to fulfill Miss Jaeger's request.

I made an appointment for Tuesday evening, and, accompanied by a local journalist of repute, went to the home of Mr. Peters, who permitted the reporter to make copious notes of the communications as they came through while the medium was "under control." (I might remark curiously that Crowley has written that students of Magick should avoid all Spiritualists as one should Syphilis.)

The communications came a little slowly at first. There were attempts at identification of the personality of Aleister Crowley, which, I must say, were fairly close. Then prompted by questionings, Mr. Peters' "guide" disclosed the information that Crowley had probably been in Spain and Italy and went out for a walk into the country. He came to some cliffs against which rough waters were lashing - a fair identification with the coast of Portugal and the Bay of Biscay. He then proceeded to describe some peculiar crater, funnel-shaped, (this does seem like a description of the "Boco de Inferno") into which Crowley had been violently pushed by enemies, presumably of Roman Catholic persuasion or with Free Masonic connections. Moreover he prophesied that the body would never be recovered; that it had been pushed into this crater, washed into the Bay of Biscay, and apparently carried out to sea.

It is interesting, at least, to note here that in the course of his troubled life, Crowley had made innumerable enemies in both these sects. Among the Roman Catholics, by his violent and frenzied attacks on Christianity; and among the Freemasons by publishing, in his former periodical, the EQUINOX, the rituals of a secret Rosicrucian Society, of which many powerful

I made an appointment for Monday, and I was called by a local journalist of name, and he told me of the Peters, who permitted the reporter to make contact with the communications as they came through while the center was "under control." (I might remark incidentally that the writer stated that statements of Major Charles Lewis II were given as one about typical.)

The communications were a list of names and addresses and attempts at identification of the names. I must say, I was surprised, which I must say, was fairly typical of the by questioning. Mr. Peters "didn't" think it was that Crowley had probably been in the country. He had out for a walk into the country. He had been

 (this does seem like a description of the Bay of Chesapeake)
 into which Crowley had been violently taken by means proximity of Roman Catholic, and also of the two communications. However he predicted that the two be recovered; that it had been under this name, and into the Bay of Chesapeake, and it was carried out to Masons were members. For this exposure of their secrets he was never forgiven. It is claimed by his friends, that his expulsion from Italy in 1922, and from France last year, were pre-eminently due to Roman Catholic influence. This is, naturally, pure speculation, but they are borne out most peculiarly by the reports of the medium.

The Portuguese police nevertheless confess themselves entirely puzzled by the disappearance, and I feel that they will continue to be so puzzled, for the dead body of Aleister Crowley will never be found.

Yet, although Aleister Crowley is gone, his work will live for ever. He was a writer of extraordinary strength, virility, and versatility. His poems have stamped him as one of the greatest poets with which these Isles of Great Britain have been blessed. The English Review stated in 1912, that "Mr. Crowley is one of our few real poets. He has written things which will never die." The Occult Review declared that "Aleister Crowley is among the first of living English poets. It will not be many years before this fact is generally recognised and duly appreciated."

He has also written novels of no inconsiderable merit. His "DIARY OF A DRUG FIEND" is a book which will provide discussion for several years to come. That it has been attacked by certain elements in the Press does not damage its value. His Magical Works are, naturally, for a smaller circle of readers, but here too, he has written portions which will be referred to for many years -- particularly with regard to the problem of the mind, and its training.

to write this up. (Or could you do it?)

If Duchworth refuses try other likely sources of funds.

4. You must also get a man to write the novel of the whole story, 80,000 words, which I am offering to Duchworth. I enclose the letter. You had better see <sup>-Duchworth's manager-</sup> Powell, yourself at once. I want that £500, and his weak mind may fail to grasp the inwandness of the letter. (He gave £500 to Betty May. Get a better man than Gerald Amityge.) ~~Don't tell him I'll find~~ He may make a counter-proposition, if so, make him telegraph it. You must please push this through without any inhibitions or lack of confidence. (Pais has just cabled a man, here to track Minister, & get photos.) We had better hurry some taken - Hustle! Take a day off if need be

My dear Mr. Reardon

Now that poor Plester has been cut off in the midst of his sins, there is no reason for concealing the strange truth any longer. It must often have struck you as remarkable that he should have been brought up at two public schools, chosen both a diplomatic and a medical career, been so saintly and so debauched a character, so liked and so detested, seen in London while he was lying ill in Sicily - and so on.

The explanation is however simple. He and I were twins. The fact was concealed by our parents, even from the Registrar, for reasons connected with the creed of the Plymouth Brethren.

We took this as a great joke, and encouraged people to make mistakes. We were not really very much

It is really necessary to disclose the secret now, as the

 I replaced him <sup>(Alton)</sup> frequently, as he was useful to both of us,
